Never before have bulldozers and steam shovels performed before such a large and cager aodience as that which was waiting for them at Har Homa yesterday afternoon.

A coople of thousand people were there, including members of re media, soldiers, police, order Police, MKs, and just prain gawkers.

But if they thought they were coming to see some kind of showdown, a demonstration, or violence, they were at the wrong spot. The hoge security detail was prepared for any eventuality.

While rocks were thrown and tires burned in Bethlehem, here all the action took place on the treads. From every angle, from close-up to wide-angle, every pirouette performed by the constructioo equipment was photographed for history.".

It was a perfect media event, and cynics could argue it was so staged by the government: a photo opportunity for TV cameras to get their pictures on the first day of the long-awaited event and then move on, allowing for the serious work to get started today. One Swedish TV crew, for example, had flown in Saturday night just to record this. It was replacing the regularly stationed crew that had recently gone to another bot spot -Albania.

The performance began at 2 p.m., when the four bulldozers and steam shovels set off from Kibbutz Ramat Rahel atop flatbed trucks to get to the theater in time for their 2:30 performance. After a morning of heavy rain, the skieshad turned partly cloudy, and though cold and blustery, it was not enough to deter the multitude that came for the show.

On the way, the convoy - the flatbeds escorted by a dozen IDF and police vehicles - passed

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani was called from the cabinet meeting on Har Homa yesterday morning to address a subcommittee of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee on the subject.

"I think it would be a mistake to give in to threats," Kahalani told parliamentary reporters. "We've beeo aware of the threats for a long time. We're prepared for any flare-up, and our response will be quick and hard wherever necessary." Asked about the reports that Yasser

Foreign Ministry tries to counteract PA accusations

By DAVID MAKOVSKY

As the Palestinians continue to charge that Israel is violating the Oslo Accords with its construction plans for Har Homa - an allegation that Israel contests - the Foreign Ministry Legal Division is apparently seeking to regain the political offensive. It issued a paper to its almost 100 diplomatic missions abroad alleging that the Palestinian Authority has systematically violated the "Note for the Record" which was attached to the Hebron accord in January. The "Note for the Record" has been a centerpiece of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's insistence that he has attained "reciprocity" from the Palestinians.

The Foreign Ministry paper states, "for its part, the Palestinian Council undertook to complete the process of revising the Palestinian Charter, to take strengthened measures to fight terrorism and prevent violence - including the transfer of suspects, confiscation of illegal firearms, and reduction of the size of the Palestinian police to that permitted in the Interim Agreement, and to conduct Palestinian Council activity in the areas of Palestinian jurisdiction and not in Jerusalem. "In respect of every one of these commitments, the Palestinian side has failed to demonstrate its intention or will to comply with its undertakings."

At the same time, the paper insists, "Israel undertook to implement the first phase of the further redeployment process, to release women prisoners who had not yet been released, and to reopen negotiations on a range of issues including safe passage. Dahaniya Airport, Gaza Port, etc. Israel has complied with its undertakings in all these aspects."

The Palesunians have complained that none of those issues under negotiation have been resolved, with the exception of clearance for PA Chairman Yasser Arafat's aircraft to and from Dahaniya, something which does not appear in the Note for the Record.

Below are some of the main allegations made in the 15-point · "Recent months have seen a marked decline in the extent of Palestinian activity directed against terrorists. Not only has the Council ceased to arrest individuals suspected of terrorist activity ... hut it has continued to release members of terrorist groups, many of whom have been actively involved in the organization and perpetration of acts of terror."

 "Israel has to date submitted 19 transfer requests (relating to 23 individuals) to the Palestinian side and none have been complied with." "Over the last year, over 20

Hamas fighters involved in terrorist activity were recruited into the Palestinian forces." "The Hebron Protocol permits a maximum of 400 policemen, some 1500 Palestinian police are operating, many of them armed with rifles which both in type and quantity violate the provisions of the Hebron Protocol."

• The PA has "only confiscated a token number of arms from among the tens of thousands of illegal weapons in the areas under its authority."

Bat Shalom and Peace Now supporters protest the Har Homa construction at the site yesterday.

US concerned over violence

By HILLEL KUTTLER and news agencies

US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright yesterday urged Israel and the Palestinian Authority to resume negotiations, saying violence is no answer to the dispute.

"We are obviously very concerned about the fact that violence is never an answer to the problems in the Middle East, and we would very much want to see a return to the table," she told reporters, at a White House briefing in advance of this week's Helsinki summit. between President Bill Clinton and Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

"That is the only time that there has been progress in the Middle East, when the parties are actually talking to each other at the table. And that is the way we would like to see things proceed."

Albright added that "the Israelis understand

Arafat has given Hamas the go-ahead to conduct terrorist attacks, State Department spokesman Nicholas Bums said US officials "don't believe it to he true. And we will certainly expect that Chairman Arafat keeps his commitment to Israel and to the US that there will be no violence. We also expect that extremists on the Israeli side will not provoke violence or resort to violence themselves." Condemnation of the start of construction at Har Homa came from throughout the international community yesterday. "The start of construction at Har Homa outside Jerusalem can do nothing but harm the peace process," British Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind said in a statement. "Like all settlements, this one will be illegal, and it goes against the spirit of the Oslo agreement. I am disappointed that the Israeli government [has] taken this decision against the strong advice of French Foreign Minister Herve de Charette called the constructioo "an obstacle to peace" and warned against a resurgence of violence.

"I hope that violence will not start again in this part of the Middle East and I can only suggest to both sides to do all they can to avoid it." he said.

"France feels that the decision taken by the Israel government goes against the spirit and the letter of the Oslo Accords, as well as other accords hetweeo Israelis and Palestinians."

Jordan urged Israel to reverse its decision. We regard settlements as contradictory to international law and agreements signed between the Palestinians and Israel, as well as between Jordan and Israel," Information Minister Marwan Muasher told a press conference, following a cabinet meeting.

UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan expressed "disappointment and deep concern."

Fearing an eruption of violence as bulldozers started work on Har Homa yesterday, the IDF ordered the closure of Joseph's Tomb in Nablus yesterday, demanding that students from the Od Yosef Chai yeshiva and all worshipers and visitors leave the site.

A spokesman for the IDF Central Command said the site would remain closed until further notice. Yeshiva director Eli Rosenfeld said that although the start of work on Har Homa is welcome, he is demanding that the government and security forces secure the area. "It is much more preferable to have Jews inside the compound than outside," he said.

through the Talpiot neighborhood, where bystanders cheered upon bearing of their destination. As the entourage snaked its way down the curving road to the intersection between Umm Tuba and Beit Sahur, dozens of cameras set up on tripods were preparing to greet it. Up the mountainside drove one bulldozer, and up followed the media. Off to the side, a steam shovel moved a few rocks with its jaws, and that, too, was recorded.

And so it went for two-and-ahalf hours, until the equipment was parked at the top of the hill for the night. Left behind was a long scar of brown earth between the patches of green grass and rock.

A kilometer away, on a facing hill known as Givat Hatayarim in Beit Sahur, sat Palestinian and Peace Now protesters. There was nothing to see from where they sat, but their tent city - by now grown to six tents, from two Monday afternoon - was the focal point of the opposition to the construction.

Palestinian leader Faisal Husseini sat in one of the small tents, the words "Orient House" spray-painted on the outside in English and Arabic, giving interviews by the numbers, as wave after wave of journalists and camera crews squeezed in to get a quote or a sound hite. Har Homa, Day One.

NEW YORK - Attorney Melvin Salberg was expected to be named chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations late yesterday, sources said. Salberg, who also was installed as president of the American Zionist Movement on Monday, would succeed Leon Ronald Lauder, the businessman-philanthropist who is the new president of the Jewish National Fund, had been widely seen as the favorite to head the Presidents' Conference. But Lauder is close to Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, which made some in the Jewish community uneasy, believing that Lauder was too closely associated with the Right to be able to reflect a consensus of the Jewish community.

Once the pre-eminent organization in American Jewish life, the Presidents' Conference had been all but marginalized during the Rabin-Peres years.

In its 40 years, the conference. has often served as a go-between when relations between Jerusalem and Washington were strained.

Rabbinate: Civil divorces not acceptable

Women immigrants who went through civil divorce proceedings in their countries of origin are being required to undergo a second, religious divorce by rabbinical courts here, the Knesset

Immigration and Absorption Committee was told yesterday. Committee member MK Naomi Chazan (Meretz) said that some 30,000 single-pareot families headed by women had immigrated bere in the past seven years, and that "some of the women will remain agunot if they are unable to locate their husbands to go through a second divorce according to Halacha." Chazan suggested that Israel's representations in the CIS include rabbinate representatives who would explain the situation to women before they immigrate. Aryeh Dean Cohen

MDA sanctions reduce hospitals' blood supply

The supply of blood to hospitals was reduced drastically yesterday, as Magen David Adom workers applied sancoons over the organization's non-payment of a special allotment given to hospital lab workers and biochemists. Only 150 units of blood and blood components were transferred to the hospitals, instead of the 1,400 units on an average day. In addition, during the day shift, ambulances are not going out on call unless there is an accompanying medic along with the driver. Health Minister Yeboshua Matza, who is abroad, has asked the Treasury to respond to the demands by tomorrow. Judy Siegel

Spy's letters to MKs raise ire of Justice Ministry

By BATSHEVA TSUR

The Justice Ministry is examining the possibility of amending the Prisons Law so that it will be possible to censor letters containing classified information that prisoners seod to MKs, the ministry spokespersoo said yesterday.

She was commenting on a report in Yediot Aharonot that convicted spy Mordechai Vanunu had written bundreds of letters cootaining classified information.

The censor stopped most of them, but, since letters to MKs are not censored, those be reportedly wrote to Israeli-Arab MKs went through.

"The existing regulations allow the prison director to open inmates' letters for ceosorship purposes ... and this bas several times stood up in court," spokesperson Etti Esbed said yesterday. But, she said, it was being checked whether this also could be applied to letters sent to MKs and whether the law required amendment.

Vanunu is serving an 18-year sentence for providiog the Sunday Times of London with pictures and documents allegedly proving Israel had nuclear weapons in Dimona.

The Supreme Court had banned publication of details about the case, but the routine censorship of his letters revealed that Vanunu was ignoriog the court order. The information he had passed on to the Israeli-Arab MKs was "top secret," Eshed reveals that in July 1984, few days before the elections to the 10th Knesset, GSS chief Avraham Shalom and his deputy Reuven Hazak decided to put prime minister Yitzhak Shamir in a situadon in which he could not refuse to establish secret contacts with the PLO.

To convince Shamir, Shalom and Hazak told him that the contacts would concern missing Israeli soldiers. Shamir agreed to entrust the missioo to the GSS and a Canadian middleman, Steve Cohen, who had held talks with the PLO since the early

The first contacts between Yossi Ginossar, then the GSS representative in the US, and ous political leaders in the Middle East, Said Kamal, a member of the Fatah took place in New York in July 1985. A small ministerial committee, headed by prime minister Shimon Peres and defense minister Yitzhak Rabin, guided the contacts. Shamir, the foreign minister, was not a member of the committee, but was informed about the details of the contacts, and never opposed them, even when he was told that they dealt with an eventual political solution to the Israel-Palestinian conflict.

The Israeli attack on PLO headquarters in Tunis, the Achille Lauro affair, and the Bus 300 affair delayed the continuation of the contacts and the start of the negotiadons until February '86, when the first secret oegotiatioos took place in Paris.

Participating were Shlomo Gazit, former head of the IDF intelligence. Ginossar, Hani Hassan, Arafat's top political adviser, Kamal, and Cohen. Other meeoogs followed in Paris and Brussels. The last meeting took place in Paris on April 3, 1986 without achieving real progress. The resignation of Shalom and Ginossar following their implication in the Bus 300 scandal put an end to the secret talks, since the new GSS head, Yoser Hermelin, decided that it was not the job of his service to deal with such political negotiations. He asked Peres' authorization in a stop contacts with the PLO. Peres refused but Shamir who replaced Peres as PM fews weeks later immediately agreed.

'Fish TV' helps researchers study Red Sea

By JUDY SIEGEL

An acoustic device developed in California called "Fish TV" which simulates the activity of tioy sea animals called zooplankton - is being used for the first time to explain the behavior of the in San Diego, were presented at aqualle population of the Gulf of this week's second international Eilat and the Red Sea. Preliminary findings from the use of the device, invented by engineer Dr. Jules Jaffe of the

Scripps Institute of Oceanography Jerusalem and Eilat's Inter-

Red Sea Conference in Eilat. The research, only half completed, is being carried out by Dr. Amatzia Genin of the Hebrew University in Uoiversity Marine Research Institute.

The event, which ends today, drew 120 marine biologists and other experts from Israel, Egypt, Germany, Jordan and Palestinian Authority. the Genin became familiar with Jaffe's plans for developing an acoustic undersea device when he conducted research at Scripps. "I immediately recognized the benefit it could have to the study of zooplankton, which can be as small as one-millimeter long; the technique can also be applied to air traffic control, 3-D imaging of moving things, medicine and a number of other fields," he said. Zooplankton are the most important link in the marine food chain. Knowing how they react under different ecological conditions is important in understanding wby some areas bave a large amount of zooplankton while others bave almost none, and how they affect the coral reef. Jaffe's device is similar to an ultrasouod scan performed on a fetus, except that it can cover a. five-square-meter area simultaneously by inserting transducers into the water. These emit echoes - like a bat - at such high frequency that they don't disturb undersea life, Genin said. A computer then translates the data into a virtual image on a screen.

The researchers believe that the zooplankton off Eilat swim against the curreot, which pushes them down, but they battle to preserve their place in the water.

"We hope to work in Akaba, where we helieve the winds force the tiny animals up rather thandown," Genin said.

Senior military officials said Hwang Jang-yop, Pyongyang's top ideologue who had been marconed in Secul's Beijing mission for nearly five weeks, arrived at the former US Clark airbase near Manila.

He then boarded a military helicopter bound for the mountain resort city of Baguio, 200 km north of Manila, said the senior officers, who asked not to be identified.

The cloak-and-dagger nature of his flight, which could have come out of the pages of a Cold War spy novel, lingered for hours after his reported arrival in the Philippines. There was no official confirmation that Hwang, accompanied by at least three other people, had arrived in Bagnio.

President Fidel Ramos said he had no information on the matter. "No, I have not received a report," Ramos said, adding: "I will verify that and later on, whatever be the result, we will have the Department of Foreign Affairs issue a statement."

Foreign Undersecretary Rodolfo Severino, who cancelled a news briefing, said: 'I am waiting for orders

MANILA (Reuter) - In an opera- identity by telling officers chosen to protect him that a "foreign investor is coming."

A Filipino diplomat said: "The military may be misleading you. Remember that this is a top security operation."

Beijing and Seoul both con-furned that Hwang, architect of North Korea's ruling ideology of strict self-reliance and 24th in the impoverished country's hierarchy, had left China but refused to say where he was taken.

"What I can tell you is that through consultations among all sides, the problem has already basically been solved," said Foreign Ministry spokesman Cui Tiankai.

Hwang wanted to go to Seoul but Filipino diplomats said he had to be taken elsewhere first to minimize embarrassment to North Korea.

Military sources said Hwang could stay in the Philippines from three days to a week. A senior Seoul official said Hwang would stay in a third country "for a considerable period of time" before coming to South Korea.

Officials shrouded Hwang's clandestine escape from Beijing in clouds of rumor and confusion.

At about 8.00 p.m. Monday, three minibuses with darkened windows drove slowly out from the diplomatic quarter of Beijing, driving around the armored personnel carriers, traffic bollards and police carrying assault rifles who had guarded the mission since Hwang slipped in.

Yeltsin ready for Helsinki

By TIMOTHY HERITAGE

MOSCOW (Reuter) - President Boris Yeltsin goes into tomorrow's summit with US President Bill Clinton looking unexpectedly firmly in control in Russia after a government shake-up which has completed his dramatic political comeback.

Doubts remain over the 66-year-old Kremlin leader's long-ternt health and abil-ity to carry out the bold reforms heralded by Monday's unveiling of the most far-reaching cabinet changes since 1991. A relapse at any time cannot be ruled out.

But a string of table-thumping rebukes for his ministers, some fiery defence of Russia's interests on the world stage and his clear physical improvement after illness project an image of strength unimaginable only a few weeks ago. "This is again the very Yeltsin who decisively began reforms in Russia," presiden-oal ally Alexander Livshits said, despite losing his post as deputy prime minister and finance minister.

Many independent observers would hesitate to compare the much thinner-lonking Yeltsin of today with the vigorous leader who launched economic reforms after becoming president in 1991. But with immaculate timing before the Helsinki summit, at which Yeltsin wants to likely a few weeks ago. "Yeltsin looks stronger by the day. Barring emergencies, he could survive politically until the end of his term (in 2000)," said Andrei Piontkowski, head of the independent Center for Strategic Studies think-tank. Yeltsin's tactics have been straightforward. He has seized every opportunity to look tough and show who is boss.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin (Renter)

He pulled no punches in a state-of thenation speech on March 6, saying openly that the country was in a dreadful mess but resolutely pledging to end the chaos.

He has toughened resistance to NATO's eastward expansion plans, showing communist and nationalist foes that he is not about to give in to the West and portraying himself as responsible by saying he will avert a return to the Cold War.

Monday's reshuffle was the culmination of his comeback. He brought in liberal reformers at the expense of relative conservatives and signalled the start of a major new drive for economic change.

"Yeltsin now portrays the image of a strong politician. At the summit he will say he is defending Russian interests while not letting the world slide into a second Cold War," Piontkowski said.

"The West and Clinton will help Yeltsin because they want to support him, seeing no alternative to him." Despite Yeltsin's recovery, many questions remain about his health and political will to carry the reforms through, and they can be answered only with time.

"The government changes show a serious shift towards reformers but oow the key is whether Yeltsin is really ready and able to inject the political capital needed to push through the reforms," said political analyst Andrei Kortimov.

Yeltsin has promised many times to reform the economy, end poverty, pay wages and pensions on time, crack down on crime and corruption and reform the underfunded armed forces. Many of his promises have proved empty. Similarly, he has bounced back from illness before only to fall ill again. He recovered from two heart attacks in 1995 to fight an energetic and successful re-election campaign last year, but was taken ill when victory was in sight.

> 50 feared dead in Russian plane crash

MOSCOW (AP) - A civilian airliner crashed in southern Russia yesterday morning and all 50 people on board were feared dead.

One Russian official said an explo sion was suspected.

The Stavropol Airlines AN-24 plane crashed after taking off from the southern city of Stavropol, said Viktor Beltsova, a spokesman for the Emergency Situations Ministry.

The 41 passengers and nine crew members were all believed killed. when the plane slammed into a wooded area near the city of Cherkessk, about 90 km south of Stavropol, the spokesman said.

Rescue workers flew to the site and have identified at least 24 bodies, said Vladimir Khubiyev, president of the Karachayevo-Cherkessia region, told the Interfax news agency.

The airliner appeared to have exploded in the air because plane fragments and human remains were scattered over a 6-km-wide area; Erkenov was quoted as saying.

The plane was flying at 6,000 meters when it disappeared off radar screens and crashed at 10:50 a.m., officials said. It was headed to the northern Turkish city of the Black Sea coast, 400 km south of Stavropol. Trabzon is a popular destination among the estimated 1 million Russian "shuttle traders" who visit Turkey every year to buy inexpensive clothing and consumer goods they can sell at a profit back home. A Turkish television station. quoting airline officials, reported that no Turks were on the plane. Stavropol Airlines is one of the many private airlines that have emerged since the 1991 breakup of the Soviet Union. Many of the air-, lines have poor safety records and there have been numerous crashes in the former Soviet republics in recent years.

Zairean rebels target Kinshasa

KISANGANI (Renter) - Zairean rebel leader Laurent Kabila declared a ceasefire around thecaptured city of Kisangani yesterday and said Kinshasa and a diamond center were the next targets. The Congolese Red Cross meanwhile said members of ailing President Mohutu Sese Seko's family had joined Zaireans taking refuge in neighboring Congo in the face of rebel advances. At rebel headquarters in the eastern border city of Goma, Kabila said he was declaring a temporary ceasefire for 20 km around Kisangani to allow in aid and let people return. We will not go to Ubundu while the ceasefire at Kisangani holds if they (Zairean troops) do not attack us," Kabila told a news conference. Some 100,000 refugees fleeing the rebels are massed around Ubundu, 100 km southeast of Kisangani.

Addressing more than 10,000 supporters in Goma yesterday, Kabila said the next rebel targets were the capital and the diamond-mining capital of Mbuju-Mayi in central Kasai region. He said he could reach Kinshasa hy June.

NEW YORK (AP) - The lift of Irish music suddenly stopped. The pipes and drums went silent. The cheering ceased.

The mood became abruptly solemn as the New York St. Patrick's Day Parade halted and marchers and spectators paused in memory of 1.5 million Irish who died in the "Great Hunger" which peaked 150 years ago in "Black Police arrested two people early yesterday morning for their involvement in a minor brawl, said police spokesman Kevin Mulrooney. Dore Gold, Netanyahu's foreign policy adviser, said that Israel does not believe there could be spontaneous violence due to the PA's massive security apparatus, for which Arafat, he said, controls the "switch."

US officials privately said Hamas leaders emerged from a March 9 meeting with PA officials with the perception they would acquiesce to attacks, but stressed there is no hard evidence to suggest that any PA official okayed terror.

In Channel 1 interview last night, Netanyahu dismissed Palestinian statements that the peace process is over, and defended his action as keeping faith with Israel's past. "For 3,000 years, Jews dreamed of Jerusalem," he declared.

Shabbat in Ramat Aviv

thile all eyes are on the Har Homa standoff, another conflict is heating up over whether a new mall in the Tel Aviv neighborhood of Ramat Aviv will be open on Shabbat. As usual, the involvement of politicians in the dispute is complicating, rather than diffusing, the conflict.

It all began when a religious businessman, Lev Leviev, bought a controlling interest in the Africa Israel, which owns the soon-to-be-completed Ramat Aviv mall. The mall, which will be one of the largest in the Tel Aviv area, was expected to be open on Shabbat, like many other mails in predominantly secular areas of the country.

The dozens of businesses that signed contracts with Africa Israel to open sbop in the mall, including Israel Theaters and McDonald's, planned on the weekend shoppers to maximize their profits. But earlier this month. Leviev convinced the board of Africa Israel to change its plans and keep the mall closed on Shabbat.

The conflict quickly blossomed from a contract dispute between the mall and its tenants still to be resolved - to a full-fledged test of wills between Israel's secular and religious camps. Am Hofshi ("A Free People"), a secular-rights group, is threatening to organize a consumer boycott of the mall if it stays closed on Sbabbat. Backing this same aggressive line is Tel Aviv Mayor Ronni Milo, who declared that if "Bnei Brak" tries to impose its will on Ramat Aviv, Ramat Aviv would take the battle to Bnei Brak.

Milo threatened, in effect, that the secular citizens of Tel Aviv, outraged by the potential impairment of their right to sbop on Shabbat, would drive through haredi Bnei Brak on the day of rest. For good measure, Deputy Mayor Dan Darin (Meretz), threatened to deny new building permits to Africa Israel if the mall is closed on Shabbat.

Predictably, Milo's threats were a major agenda item at Monday's meeting of the Agudat Yisrael Party. Party secretary Menahem Porush reportedly said at the conference that the haredi public would isolate Milo and destroy him politically. Aguda chairman Avraham Shapira called on the religious parties to emulate the tactics of the Land of Israel Front and pool their Knesset members into a "Force 23" that would defend the Sbabbat with threats to bring down the government.

is coercing whom. The tenants of the mall, who bought into the project thinking it would be open on Sbabbat, would seem to bave a legitimate beef with Africa Israel, since the rules were changed midstream.

But even if there is an unkosher element in wbat Africa Israel, at Leviev's insistence, bas done to its tenants, the issue at hand is still primarily a contract dispute, not a matter of religion and state. This is not an example of the government imposing religious laws, but of a private company making a decision that, even if contrary to its financial interests, is within its rights.

The political uproar bas little to do with defending the tenants' rights. Rather, it is about wbether the rights of secular people are being violated by depriving them of the services of a particular mall on Shabbat. Some commentators claim that the struggle is on an even loftier level, and involves whether the culture and lifestyle of secular residents will be treated with respect equal to that accorded religious ones.

The attempt to impose symmetry is, in this case, mistaken. It is one thing to claim that secular people bave the right to live their lives free of religious coercion; quite another to claim that closing a business on Shabbat is as offensive to a secular person as keeping one open is to the religiously observant. It might not make either extreme bappy, but most Israelis probably prefer a situation in which businesses are not forced to be either closed or open on Shabbat, and that there is a mixture of the two.

Even in famously secular Ramat Aviv, the neighborhood council is divided on this issue. Some members of the council wanted the mall closed on Shabbat to preserve the quality of life in an area known as "Green Ramat Aviv." Even many people who shop on Shabbat would probably regret it if there were no lessening in the commercial bubbub on Shabbat.

If anything, this supposed example of religious coercion might better be seen as a test of religious freedom: Do business owners bave the right to manage their property in a manner consistent with their religious values, or will they be compelled by the Jewish state to violate Sbabbat?

With the growing political muscle of religious parties beginning to be felt, the concern of increased religious coercion is a valid one. The flap concerning the Ramat Aviv mall, bowever. case of secular politicians choosing crass ven if King Hussein's initia-tive results in a meeting between Binyamin Netanyahu and Yasser Arafat, it is clear that the common ground between the two leaders - the Oslo agreement - is no longer there.

The agreement's explicit provisions are no longer to Arafat's taste, so he has abandoned them. In their place, he is trying to substitute something vague, ambiguous, and hard in define called the "Oslo spirit" via which he can introduce new demands at will

It took great effort oo Netanyabu's part to bolster the Knesset majority in favor of implementing the agreement; and Hebron was outstanding proof that he was doing just that. But when he turned around and looked for Arafat, he found that the chairman had departed, trailing the aura of the "Oslo spirit."

Arafat's repudiation of Oslo per se comes across in almost everything he says. For example, he frequently talks about "the diplomatic process," but bardly ever mentions the Oslo agreement - not surprisingly, since it puts limits on what he can demand.

He cannot, for instance. demand immediate operation of the Dehaniya airport. The agreement emphasizes Israel's unconditional right to suit security arrangements there to its needs, and Arafat can't interfere.

But that hasn't stopped him trying, for several weeks, to do away with this limitation, even though it stems from one of the agreement's most fundamental parts.

NOT one of Arafat's demands since Hebron has actually been based on the agreement. Conveniently, he invokes the "Oslo spirit" and "the spirit of reconciliation" while he insists on more Israeli concessions.

The Palestinians' demand vis-avis Jerusalem was known before the signing of the agreement, yet it says nothing about freezing con-struction in Jerusalem until the end of final status negotiations. Israel's representatives would have rejected out of hand any Palestinian attempt to condition their signing oo a clause prevent-ing the "Judaization of Jerusalem." So why on earth should we agree to such a condition now, in the name of the "Oslo spirit"? The Likud government opted to uphold a written agreement concluded by its predecessor, common practice with international agreements. Even so, there were objections to ratifying the agree-ment with the PLO - an organization. not a nation.

Whatever honoring agreements involves, it certainly does not include indulging the other side's fantasics - in this case, far-reaching gestures to dissipate Palestinian threats of vinlence.

These threats, made by many Palestinian leaders, only strengthen the conclusion that Arafat no longer sees himself as bound by the provisions of the Oslo agree-

This is the surry of Julian West, an upper-class 1880s Bostonian who falls into a trance after he takes a mysterious sleeping. potion. He sleeps for 113 years. In Bellamy's new world, everyone works for the government. All get the same wage. Everyone has a credit card (he got that right!) on which his or her annual wage is entered. Each time something is bought, its cost is deducted from the card.

There is no money. You do all your buying in a government-run mall that keeps samples of everything you could possibly want. A system of pneumatic tubes moves everything along. The purchase usually is waiting by the time you get home.

The work day is four hours. Vacation is six months per year. Work is from age 21 to 45. The mentally and physically handi-capped do what light work they can, but get paid the same as everybody else.

Sir, - What's in a name? Everything. Much of the intensified pressure and growing hostilibetween Israel and the ty Palestinian Authority is a result of a label. Har Homa viewed as part of "Jerusalem" symbolizes the concerns of the opposing sides and has enormous political/religious significance.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

What would be the case if Har Homa, instead of being called "Jerusalem," was labeled "Sur Bahir 2,"or a totally neutral title like "Rehovot" or "Boston" or "Los Angeles"? Facts on the ground, geographically/pbysically, would be expected to be the same, would they not?

The same need for housing, the same distance from this region to various offices located in or near the center of the city - but there would be a great cooling and calming down. Are we not shooting ourselves in the foot in having adopted a certain modern, greatly expanded map of Jerusalem as the ultimate defining source of what should carry this famous inflammable name?

mable name? I suggest that we consider con-cepts like "core Jerusalem," and "unbarden Jerusalem." "Core Jerusalem" might be the Old City plus a few kilometers in the western and southern directions. This could well do a great deal to defuse the ongoing frictioo that is croding hopes for a self-respecting peace.

HOW did we come to this happy pass?

Well, says Bellamy, corporate giants at the end of the last century got bigger and bigger, gobbling up competition, and the rich got richer, until there was only one giant conglomerate - and the govemment took it over because the people demanded it

And now, he says, we "enjoy the blessings of a social order at once so simple and logical that itseems but the triumph of common sense."

In Bellamy's world, housework is history. People eat in community dining rooms. It's cheaper, and the food is better than anything Mom could cook at bome. All washing and ironing is ootsourced.

Women's wages are the same as men's, but they work shorter hours and get rest stops, plus looger vacations. They are assigned only work they can han-__. die. Maternity leave? Certainly.

In relations with men, women are free to declare their love first, (radical for 1888), though in the end, as one current critic observes, Bellamy created a world in which women reflected the 19th-century ideal: "pure, pious, domestic and submissive." Still, he was a hero to most 19thcentury feminists. One women's rights leader pronounced his book "the book of the century."

You will look in vain in Looking Buckword for the gimmicks and gadgets that are part of our baggage as we enter the new millennium. There are the pneumatic tubes. There is the adaptation of the telephone into a kind of radio. And on rainy days, a waterproof covering automatically turns the sidewalk into a "dry corridor." That's about it.

Looking Backward is, of course, a persuasive socialist tract, awakening Americans to the possibilities of change. It won converts to socialism by making it respectable, exciting and desirable.

On March 30, 1888, the Boston Transcript reviewed the book favorably, but couldn't swallow Bellamy's timetable. The reviewer thought the changes would take 75 centuries - not just one:

General interest in Looking. Backward tailed off in the 1920s, but scholarly interest flourishes in scores of books and articles.

Critics are still dissecting Bellamy's ideas after 100 years and more. 2. 4. e. 2. . . .

Teens, trauma and tragedy

ow can I help my 14-yearold daughter cope with the terrible trogedy at Naharayim? Can you help me understand her possible responses?

Dr. Alan J. Flushman, adult and child psychiatrist ond pediatrician, offers these insights:

You might imagine your 14ear-old as living simultaneously in three positions in a tug of war. One side is pulling towards further development, one side is pulling backwards. And at the center the child is feeling an uncomfortable lack of balance. Young teenagers travel between these three positions, but find it hard to be aware of more than one al any given

The massive impact of witnessing girls their own age being gunned down defensetessly will increase dramatically the intensity of each of the pulls, and make the center especially wobbly. You might be well advised to ask yourself during any conversation or fragment thereof, "From which position is my child speaking?" Then you can address each posi-

For example, the position of developmental progress may speak in a definitive and seemingly adult manner. A child may be taking an extreme and unquestioning stance, perhaps restating positions he or she has heard from the adult political or religious spectrum of opinion. Your daughter may be experiencing and giving expression to a fearlessness that you may find chilling. At the time, it may be more important to respect the child's feeling of certainty and to appreciate just how important some clarity is for her at the present time.

FEATURES

At the other side, developmental regression may speak in the voice of profound fear and uncertainty. Or, more likely, you may find the child struggling desperately not to allow herself to experience helplessness. Young teenagers are often very frightened by being frightened. They feel that their recently acquired independence is 100 shaky to tolerate a feeting of need and dependence that they fear pulls them backwards to childishness.

Here it may be most belpful to encourage permission to experience deep fear and helplessness temporarily. You can help your daughter to let herself feel very shaken, and stay with her while you express your confidence that her growth towards independence can tolerate these feelings.

At the center, the feeling of how the child defines herself may seem most welcome and easy to communicate with, during the fleeting or more prolonged moments when it is dominant. Your daughter may be able to express a sense of confusion within herself, feeling herself at the center of contradictory pulls. You may feel her more of a partner in the conversation.

If you imagine the child standing on a narrow platform from which she is feeling pulled, you could picture your role as helping and space. By space I mean help-her broaden her base, giving her more room to place her feet for a more steady balance, with some room to sway to either side without toppling over. You can help her expand this base both in time of opinion or feeling was spoken about by her friends? How is each one different?

With regard to time, I want to raise two things. First, bow has she noticed that her own responses have already fluctuated over time? And second, some help in expanding towards the future - that feelings and thoughts grow and change over time.

This is best expressed by engaging in a continuous conversation over weeks and months, returning to the point in order to observe together how things have been changing. I think young teenagers appreciate some help in realizing that response to extreme feelings is not "settled" so qnickly or definitively, and that they have time to broaden their repertoire of feelings and thoughts.

Let me summarize. Young teenagers are a highly inconsistent bunch. Parents have an intuitive appreciation that they are often speaking to different sides of their child while the child does not realize this.

l am encouraging you to rely on this healthy intuition especially when helping your child to relate to last week's horrible events. Growing up involves facing the tragic side of life as well. Tragedy becomes trauma when a child feels overwheimed by feelings and adjusts and restricts her personality to one side or another, with a feeling that she has fallen off her own base. You can help your child face tragedy and avoid trauma by responding flexibly to her fluctuating sides while keeping the con-

ing her to be thoughtful about a range of possible feelings and thoughts in addition to the ones

she has noted. It is often easiest to elicit such expansions by asking about her friends. For example, what range language. Predictably, perhaps, recent research suggests that language development relies on a combination of both genetic and environmental factors. The mastery of grammar, syntax and vocabulary is fostered by listening to parents and others (or, in the case of the deaf, seeing people use sign language), especially during the first year or two of life.

At the same time, the brain is so exquisitely predisposed to language two-day-olds sucked more vigorously while listening to French than while listening to Russian, suggesting they were already more familiar with the general sounds of French. At six months, most babies are starting to vocalize nascent syllables, like ba ba and da da, Soon after, they start playing with permutations of those sounds in that joyful stage of linguistic advancement known as babbling.

Steven Reznick and University of Colorado co-workers Robin Corley and JoAnn Robinson indicate that, on average, toddlers typically understand 10 times the number of words they actually speak. That is, if you ask them "Where is your ear?" they will point to their ear, indicating they under-stand the meaning of the word "ear." But if you ask them "What's this?" while pointing to your ear, many will not reply by saying "ear." They comprehend more than they can say." But the ratio of comprehension to speech varies dramatically from child to child. And happily for parents of quiet babies, studies show that a child's degree of talkativeness still in the womo Recent studies also suggest that although parents can increase their baby's understanding of language by talking to them a lot, there is little they can do to make their child talk more. Talkativeness, it turns out, has more to do with a baby's genes than with the amount of time spent listening to one's parents. These are just a few of the discovcries that are increasing researchers' appreciation for that most profound of baby talents, the ability to master the complexities of language. 'Even in the first few months, in what parents may assume to be innocent verbal play or verbal volleyball, the child is learning conversational patterns of language," said Laura-Ann Petitto, a neuropsychologist at McGill University in Montreal who studies language development in children. "It's an extraordinary feat." How do children do it? For decades, linguists have fought over the question of whether language unfolds automatically, the result of an inbom genetic program, or is a learned response to the incessant cooing and jabbering of parents. The question is not just academic. Parents want to know if there is anything they can do to improve their children's future facility with words and nonsense syllables, even before they know what the

that words come forth almost spon-taneously in children raised under normal conditions.

That means parents may indeed help their children understand language by reading to them and encouraging wordplay. It also means that parents can relax with the knowledge that for most children, language happens naturally.

What goes on in babies' prelinguistic minds remains largely a mystery, but pieces of the puzzle are coming together. Petitto's studies with children (some deaf, some hearing) and with chimpanzees (including Nim Chimpsky, named for the famous linguist Noam Chomsky) suggest that a newborn's brain is primed to notice precisely the kinds of rhythms typically found in languages.

A newborn's brain is predisposed example, parents will say "That's a ball ... look at the ball," with a first birthday, they have begun to understand the meanings of some falling and rising tone on the word "ball." "The reason the child pays words. Soon after, they utter their first real pronouncements, starting with simple names for objects like attention in the first place is because a mechanism in the brain makes the falling and rising pattern very salient," Petitto said. "The "bottle," "doll" and "mommy" and "daddy." Then come the two-word combinations ("I poop," "car gone"), a rapid mastery of basic sing-song and verbal back and forth in early months make a magnificent contribution to your child's grammar and a meteoric rise in learning language." The rapidity with which babies vocabulary.

By the second or third year, they learn the basics of language leaves are learning an astonishing 10 to 12 even the experts marveling. Some words a day. That's a new word every 90 minutes or so of wakeful existence, for a total of about 13,000 words by age six and 60,000 words days old, for example, researchers by age 18.

Linguistic progress varies tremen-dously among babies, however, and just because an infant is quick to Reznick and his colleagues came to those conclusions by studying 200 identical twins and 200 fraternal (non-identical) twins. If talkativeness levels were determined by outside environmental influences (a gossipy parent, for example, or nonstop television) then identical twins should be, on average, as talkative as fraternal twins, since they are being raised in the same environment. But the researchers found that identical twins were more likely to be similar in talkativeness than were fratemal twins.

That suggests there is something in the genes, rather than in the family environment, that largely deter-mines how much a baby will talk. (The Washington Post)

Bezeq gets loan at very favorable terms

Bezeg has received a $150 million, seven-year loan at the interest rate of Libor plus 0.325% from an international consortium of banks, acting company director-general Avi Hochman disclosed yesterday. Libor stands for the London interbank offered rate.

The principal arrangers of the syndicate were the Swiss bank UBS, the German bank Dresdner and the Japanese bank Fuji. Since the loan was oversubscribed, Bezeq decided to raise a larger sum than was originally planned. The extra amount raised will partially offset future capital raising due to be carried out during this year.

The three arrangers and two co-arrangers (including Citibank) have not participated in previous syndications carried out for Bezeq. The telecommunications company was pleased by the long pay-back schedule (the ordinary period is five years) and the attractively low interest rate. Judy Siegel

European Union finance ministers this week endorsed German and French preparations for joining the EU single currency, dis-missing speculation that high German unemployment would force a delay.

The ministers backed French and German programs showing both countries are on target to get their deficit, debt and inflation down to levels required for nations adopting the single currency - the euro.

Ministers also agreed that a new EU body, proposed by France to help coordinate economic policy after the switch to the single currency, will not have decision-making powers. AP

Ford and the other Big Three US automakers, General Motors Corp. and Chrysler Corp., are focusing much of their "supercar" research on so-called bybrid propulsion systems, which combine two or more power sources to achieve greater fuel efficiency and less pollution.

While others, led by Finance. Minister Dan Meridor, bave capitulated from their original opposition to any increase, MK Avraham Poraz (Meretz-Shinui) said he will stand firm and vote against raising the minimum wage in its second and third readings.

commence operations later this year. The bank's 1996 earnings were primarily affected by a 9.7% increase in operating and other income to NJS 420.2m. compared with NIS 382.9m. The rise was due to a growth in commission-earning activity, achieved despite a 5% real erosion in commission fees and the recession in the capital market during most of 1996, Piotrkowsky said. Earnings from financing operations before provisions for doubtful debts grew 1.8% to NIS 739.5m. from NIS 726.6m. The provisions for doubtful debts fell 7.4%.

There was a 5% drop in operating and other expenses, to NIS 733.4m. compared with NIS 698.2m. Salary expenses rose 4.2% to NIS 457.8m.

Total assets reached NIS 32m. at the end of 1996, compared with NIS 19.3b. at the end of 1995.

Credit to the public rose 16.2% to NIS 22.5b. In the reported period a significant increase was recorded in rency linked credit reflecting customers' shift from unlinked shekel financing to foreign currency financing, a shift which could expose certain customers to linkage base risks, Piotrkowsky said. Credit to the construction industry totaled NIS 3.9 billion, below the 20% maximum limit approved by the Bank of Israel. In reaction to increased interest foreign currency and foreign-cur-

from international rating companies, the bank has prepared a financial report in dollar-adjusted terms as well as in inflation-adjusted terms. Dollar-adjusted net earnings for 1996 reached $83m. compared with $63m. in 1995.

Under the bank's profit-sharing scheme, in the next few days a total of NIS 15m will be awarded to over 37 thousand customers as their share in earnings for 1996.

Damon Hill awarded OBE

LONDON (Reuter) - Defending Formula One champion Damon Hill received one of Britain's highest honors yesterday when he was made an Officer of the Order of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth IL

Hill follows his late father Graham Hill who also was awarded the OBE in 1968 after winning his second world drivers' championship.

Hill won the world championship in a close battle last season driving for Williams-Renault, but was dropped from the team and eventually signed on with the lightly regarded Arrows-Yamaha team.

Kilnsmann to leave Bayern Munich

MUNICH (AP) - National captain Juergen Klinsmann said Mooday he is leaving the Bayern Munich soccer team at the end of the season.

"I had a talk with Franz Beckenbauer last week," Klinsmann said of the Bayern team president. "I told him that next season I will probably be playing outside Germany. I don't fit in here.' The 32-year-old Klinsmann has publicly criticized the "too defensive" tactics of coach Giovanni Trapattoni and had a long-running feud with captain Lothar Matthaeus.

Mesa faces rape charge

CLEVELAND (AP) - Cleveland Indians relief pitcher Jose Mesa has left spring training to attend a hearing on a rape charge against him.

Mesa, 30, has pleaded innocent to one count of rape, two counts of gross sexual imposition, one count of felonious assault and one count of carrying a concealed weapon. He is free on $10,000 bond.

Mesa is scheduled for trial March 31, so the Indians don't know whether he will be available for the start of the season April 2 at Oakland. The team is expected to ask the basehall commissioner's office this week for permission to replace Mesa with another pitcher on the 25-man roster while he is on trial.

China on International Rugby Football Board

HONG KONG (AP) - China was formally accepted yesterday as the 76th member of the International Rugby Football Board, the sport's world governing body.

China's admission was welcomed by the board's chairman. Vernoo Pugh, in a ceremony at the Hong Kong Football Club. Meanwhile, a team from the Chinese People's Liberation Army took on a squad from the British military forces in Hong Kong in the Carlsberg 10s rugby tournameot. The Chinese team from the PLA's Sports Institute in the southern city of Guangzhou defeated the Royal Highlanders 12-7 in a preliminary match in the two-day tournament.

Drop Atherton, says Illingworth

LONDON (Reuter) - Mike Atherton shoold be axed as England captain for the one-day internationals against Australia this year, according to his former chairman of selectors Ray llingworth.

Illingworth wrote in yesterday's Express newspaper that curreot chairman David Gravency should give less experienced members of the side a chance to lead the side.

"Gravency said he would consult former England captains Graham Gooch and Mike Gatting- both now England selectors – before making a decision on the captaincy in the next few weeks.

Betar Jerusalem, Mac TA advance to State Cup quarterfinals

By ORI LEWIS

Betar Jerusalem steam-rolled their way into the quarterfinals of soccer's State Cup after a 5-2 victory over Maccabi Herzliya in the round of 16 yesterday.

No less convincing, for a half at least, was Maccabi Tel Aviv's come-from-behind 3-2 victory over Zafririm Holon after they trailed 2-0 at halftime.

Also through from yesterday's matches are Hapoel Beit She'an who reached this stage for the first time after a 3-1 win over Hapoel Jerusalem, Bnei Yehuda who scored a 2-0 extra-time win over Hapoel Haifa, and Hapoel Tel Aviv and Hapoel Beersheba, both of whom needed a penalty shootout to overcome Hapoel and Maccahi Petah Tikva respectively.

The last-16 round continues today when Maccahi Haifa host Second Division leaders Hapoel Ashkelon - the only con-National League team to have made it this far. The final match of the round takes place on March 29 when Hapoel Taiba host Hapoel Kfar Sava.

Bet. Jerusalem 5, Mac. Herzliya 2 Betar began to set their sights on the league and cup double in the fourth minute of the match at Teddy Stadium when Stefan Saloi struck. ### Beersheba coasted through after a generally IFA to probe flooding of Petah Tikva pitch

The IFA has ordered private investigations firm Modi'in Ezrahi to probe allegations that Hapoel Petab Tikva deliberately flooded their ground ahead of the National League match with Maccabi Herzliya last Saturday. The claim was made yesterday by two "senior soccer officials" who refused to be named.

The two claim they saw the pitch at the Petah Tikva municipal ground drenched on a nevertheless rainy ilay, causing referee Haim Ya'acov to call off the match 45 minutes before kickoff.

Petah Tikva chairman Lior Shahar was incensed by the allegations saying that "only an evil idiot would do such a thing." The somewhat absurd claim is that Petah Tikva, who lie in second place in the league, preferred to play the match in more comfortable weather conditions, and by flooding the pitch; gave the referee no option but to call off Ori Lewis the match.

Magpies crash out of UEFA Cup

MONTE CARLO (Reuter) - Midfielder Ali Benarbia scored two second half goals as Monaco crushed Newcastle United 3-0 in the home leg of their UEFA Cup quarterfinal yesterday to reach the semifinals 4-0 on

The French league leaders went in front four minutes before halftime when midfielder Sylvain Legwinski robbed the ball from Peter. Beardsley 30 meters out, took three steps and blasted it from the edge of the box past diving goalkeeper Shaka Hislop and just inside his left post. Seven minotes into the second half the busy Benarbia, heir to Belgian Enzo Scifo as Monaco's playmaker, was in the box to volley home a cross from the right by defender Patrick Blondeao.

Benarbia put the tie totally beyond Newcastle's reach in the 67th minute when he curled a brilliant free kick from the left inside the near post after Robert Lee had fouled Brazilian striker Anderson.

Monaco are now just one round from their second European final after playing in the 1993 Cup Winners' Cup final. In other UEFA Cup quarterfinal action last night, it was Brondby 0, Tenerife

Yeboah has oot seen eye to cye with Graham since December when he started training again after a cartilage operation which had kept him out for two months.

The Ghanaian, who joined Leeds from Germany's Eintracht Frankfurt for £3.4 million, argued he was fit to play again. Graham disagreed and kept him on the bench.

LAUSANNE (Reuter) - International Skating Union (ISU) presideot Ottavio Cinquanta said yesterday that changes to figure skating's esoteric judging system could occur before next year's Winter Olympics in Japan.

But he stressed that major changes could only be passed by the hienniel ISU congress, which does not meet until mid-1998. Cinquanta is known to be upset at the confusing result of the men's event at the European championships in Paris in January, which he felt was incomprehensible to the public.

He has already ordered an immediate review of the placing system which determines results in figure skating.

Cinquanta is backed io his desire to set up a more easily understood system by IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch. REJECTION - Nuggets' Antonio McDyess blocks a shot by Lakers' Sean Rooks.

IAF chief: Arabs winning arms race Ben-Eliahu says Israel needs space defense

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN

The arms race is tipping more and more in favor of the Arabs and Israel needs to achieve superiority in space to cover itself on all froms, OC Air Force Maj.-Gen. Eitan Ben-Eliahu said yesterday.

"Just now, during an atmosphere of peace, a situation has been created where the strategic balance with the neighboring states is changing in a worrisome way." Ben-Eliahu told a conference on avionics at the Dan Panorama in Tel Aviv.

He said that some 350-400 surface-to-air missile batteries exist in the Middle East and that Syria has some 800 surface-to-surface missiles. It is estimated that Syria will have some 1,500 such missiles within the next three years.

This figure is much higher than Israeli strategists have previously thought and shows that the Syrians are serious about maintaining a military option, he said.

Ben-Eliahu also said Egypt, Syria, Iraq, and Iran all have chemical weapons, and that once the embargo is eased. Iraq will quickly resume its efforts to obtain nuclear weapons.

We think that there is a nuclear potential even though the installations were destroyed ... what remains is the knowledge, the brains, the people. The moment the embargo is lifted, the moment there is freedom, there is no reason why Iraq won't try again to

"But the capability and desire for nuclear weapons and non-conventional weapons are not found only in Iraq, they are also found in Iran. We estimate that within four or five years, it will be able to set up a factory that will be able to produce enriched uranium. We three years ... it will be able to put them in missile warheads."

Syria gave up its quest for strategic parity about a decade ago, experts say. Instead, after seeing the effects of Iraqi Scud bombing on Israel, it began heavily investing in surface-to-surface missiles. According to Tel Aviv University's Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies' Middle East Military Balance, Syria has 62 surface-to-surface missiles in service, but Yiftah Shapir, a researcher, has said the Syrians actually have 200-300 Scuds. Ben-Eliahu said that when the political situation is more relaxed Israel is able to divert more funds into research and development, but that this period has ended.

tion, to Hasson, and why? The government is not likely to fall as the result of this probe. Although Netanyahu and Lieberman were questioned - the latter more than once - sources said that while offenses were apparently committed, it is doubtful that police have been able to corroborate Hasson's report. Police learned early on who leaked the story. Hasson, who claimed she had documentation to back her story, was summoned to give evidence. So was Deri's then lawyer, Dan Avi-Yitzhak, who had himself wished to become the attorney-general, something Deri resisted, not wanting his top lawyer to abandon his trial in the middle. Avi-Yitzhak then resigned from Deri's case and in a letter to his client, cited the MK's alleged involvement in the Bar-On affair as one of the reasons.

Appel, Deri's confidante, was named by Hasson as the intermediary in the affair, he was also questioned several times. He vehemently denied all involve-ment and filed a NIS 5 million libel suit against Hasson and her superiors, IBA news director Rafik Halabi and director-general Mordechai Kirschenbaum.

Ministers and MKs who opposed the Bar-On appointment were also questioned.

Hanegbi, who is suspected of submitting misleading information to the cabinet before it voted on Bar-On's appointment, was questioned for the third time yesterday, and police said that the probe is finally complete. The investigating team will convene with State Attorney Edna Arbel tomorrow with recommendations as to who, if anyone, to indict on breach of trust and other charges.

The state plans to oppose the early release of embezzler Rami Dotan from prison when the petitions to the High Court of Justice are heard. Dotan, a former brigadier-general and IDF chief procurement officer, was sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment and demot-ed to private in 1991, for embezzling over $10 million from military contracts. The state's decision was made at a meeting yesterday between the atlorney-general, the state attorney, the IDF judge-advo-

"The state will appear as a respondent and will express the opinion that the decision [to free Dotan from jail} at this stage, after serving half his sentence. should be changed," a statement released after the meeting said. "It is possible under military law [as opposed to civilian law] to free someone after half a sentence instead of two-thirds, but it is not mandatory," the state-

day noted the severity of the crimes for which Dotan was convicted and the unusual security and public aspects of the Dotan affair, saying that damage to the country's security and educational considerations had to be weighed against considerations about Dotan's health troubles.

Earlier, President Ezer Weizman took the unusual step of turning to the attorney-general with a request that he petition the High Court on behalf of the Weizman noted that there were court precedents for refusing to grant parole on grounds of chronic illness.

Yesterday afternoon, Meretz party leader Yossi Sarid and the Мочетепт for Quality Government in Israel presented separate petitions to the High Court against freeing Dotan. Earlier, Amitai, the Citizens for Good Government movement. also petitioned the High Court against the decision.

The criticism came as Maj-Gen (res.) Herzl Bodinger, who commanded the air force at the time and appointed the members of the original investigatory panel, was giving. testimony. Although three separate air force, panels probed the accident, the civilian panel, headed by retired judge Eliahu Winograd, concentrated on the first of them, which submitted its findings in February 1993. The commission members, particularly Winograd and Maj-Gen. (res) Raphael Vardi, wanted to know why the initial panel's draft report, which found several officers responsible for the accident, was submitted to senior air force officers' for their comments. This led to changes in the draft and the final report, submitted to Bodinger, eliminated the officers' responsibility. Bodinger said he did not recall the differences between the final report. and the draft, but said it is common practice to submit reports to senior officers for comment, and this offen leads to changes in the report.
